April 8, 2020

1 ASSIGNMENT 3

1.0.1 NoSQL MongoDB

1.1 Abstract

The aim of this assignment is to convert the SQL Database into NoSQL Database . The domain of the last assignment was supermarket dataset. The data set was taken from kaggle and had information about the customer transaction for products purchased from a particular Product Line. Twitter was the social media scraped for tweets about the product line. This assignment converts the previous SQL Database into NoSQL database and stores everything in MongoDB Database.

1.2 Data Source

The Link for the data source we have used for this assignment and the previous assignment-

<https://www.kaggle.com/aungpyaeap/supermarket-sales>

What is SQL Database? SQL are relational databases. They use SQL queries to manipulate the data. Although SQL is a very powerful language, it is extremely restrictive. It requires predefined schemas to determine the structure of your data before you start working with it. SQL requires all the data to follow the same structure for working with it. Changing the structure of the schema can be disruptive for the whole system. SQL is very scalable. SQL Databases are table based and follow ACID properties, - Availability, consistency, Isolation and Durability. Some popular SQL Databases are - PostgreSQL, MySQL, Oracle, Microsoft SQL Server

What is NoSQL Database? NoSQL is primarily called the Non-Relational database or distributed databases. NoSQL has dynamic schemas for non structured data storage. In NoSQL data can be stored in various ways, document-oriented, graph based, column oriented or key value store. NoSQL database is horizontally scalable , which means it manages traffic by data sharding or adding more servers to your NoSQL Database. NoSQL databases follow the Brewer's CAP theorem (Consistency, Availability and Partition Tolerance) Some popular NoSQL Database are - Redis, RavenDB, Cassandra, MongoDB, CouchDB

1.3 Data Auditing

Data Auditing is performed on the dataset from kaggle for checking for its validity ,completeness and consistency

2 NoSQL Design explanation

We want to store the Data in a mongoDB database. In mongoDB, data is stored in the form of collections and documents. MongoDB stores the data in the form of Key value pairs.

MongoDB MongoDB is an opensource document database. It is written in C++. MongoDB is cross platform and provides high performance, high availability and easy scalability. MongoDB works on the concept of collection and document. MongoDB doesn't use table and rows to store data but instead it uses collection of JSON like documents. Documents store embedded fields so that related data can be stored within them. It is schemaless so we do not need to specify the column for the database before inserting document within them.

Collections It is a collection of documents and is equivalent to tables in RDBMS table. A collection exists within a single database. Documents within the collection can have documents with different fields however mostly all the documents in the collection are related to each other.

Documents Documents have a set of key value pairs. Documents have Dynamic schema which means documents in the same schema do not have same fields or structure. Different fields in the collection document may hold different values.

Design Decisions The database is designed by considering the product line at the top level of the hierarchy. The Product Line Database stores documents of every Product Line. Each of these documents store information about all the customers who have purchased something in the product line category and the tweets that are related to the product line.

ProductLineDoc This collection has documents that are segregated according to the product lines. The structure of each of these documents is - ##### ProductLine: Name of the Product Line ##### customerDictionary :Information about the customers, ##### ProductLine_Rating :Product Line rating by customers ##### ProductTweet :Tweets associated with the product line

CustomerDictionary This dictionary stores information about the customers who have purchased something in the product line category- This dictionary also contains payment details about the customers. Things included in this dictionary are - 'First_Name', 'Last_name', 'PhoneNumber_1', 'PhoneNumber_2', 'Email', 'Gender', 'Customer_Type', 'Amount_B

ProductTweets This dictionary stores the tweets that are related to the product line. This dictionary also stores all the hashtags that are associated with the tweet. Information stored in this dictionary - "product_Line", "created_at", "screenname", "id", "text", "retweet", "favCount", "tags"

2.0.13 Report

Sample Data -

The data source for this assignment is - <https://www.kaggle.com/aungpyaeap/supermarket-sales>
The source of data that we have used is super store dataset. The data set is taken from Kaggle.

Aim

The aim of this assignment was to convert the RDBMS created in the last assignment into NoSQL DBMS. Then answer the questions for the database.

Data Auditing The data retrieved from the kaggle datasource was audited to ensure that the data is all clean, consistent and valid. auditing was done to ensure that there are no null values or duplicate entries in the data source

After the auditing was done, the data was broken into different tables according to the RDBMS requirements

Design Decision Explanation The design decision explanation have been explained in a very detailed format in the the above section please refer to the design explanation section for more details about this Database Questions Question 1 - What are tags are associated with a person, place or thing?

The tags have been scraped for each tweet. A set has been used to store all the tags that are related to the productline so that there would be no duplicates in the hash tags retrieved

Question 2 - What social media users are like other social media users in your domain?

The social media that use same hashtags are similar to other social media users. This is the logic used for finding the users that are similar to each other.

Question 3 - What people, places or things are popular in your domain?

The productLines which have maximum tweets and retweets in an hour of a specified date are most popular in my domain.

Question 4 - What people, places or things are trending in your domain? (A trend is popularity over time.)

The hashtags which have been posted the maximum number of times are the things that most people are most talking about and are most popular in that domain.

Professionalism Professionalism has been maintained throughout this assignment

2.0.14 Conclusion

The SQL Relational database was converted into NoSQL database - MongoDB. Everything was stored in the form of documents and collection in mySQL database. As per the requirements of this assignment, all the 4 questions have been answered. The data is audited and cleaned before using for analysis. The Database design decisions have been clearly explained. A discrete report has been created for explaining the work in the assignment. We have tested that we can retrieve the data for different usecases. We have taken extra efforts to make sure that professionalism has been maintained in the assignment.
